OUR MVP KIDS® represent a wide range of ethnic and cultural diversity and are the stars of our products. An important goal of establishing our sixteen MVP Kids® throughout our product lines is to create familiarity and friendship for readers. Our MVP Kids® create a world where children can see themselves, but also learn from others who are different from themselves. Readers will learn to trust our MVP Kids®, allowing moments to address serious life issues and challenges. The products follow our MVP Kids® as they grow from toddlers to adolescents.

DIVERSITY:

Our MVP Kids® span diverse cultures, ethnicities, religions, family situations, physical challenges, education and professions. Some are the only child in their family, others have large families. Some are recent immigrants, others date to the Pilgrims.

WHERE THEY LIVE:

Our MVP Kids® live in an imaginary region of the U.S., some in the city, some in a suburb and some in the rural areas outside the city.

FORMAL LEVELING: WE RECOMMEND:

"I believe in my heart that [Sophia Day] is doing something remarkable... Through the characters she has created in these stories, we are reminded of our inalienable rights as humans to be appreciated, celebrated, and cherished as individuals. Our past history and present times tells us that we sometimes forget this.

Sophia Day has given us a gift. She has masterfully created 16 child characters who belong to 12 diverse families. We get to know Lucas, LeBron, Gabby, Sarah, Annie, Blake, Frankie, Leo, Miriam, Yong, Julia, Olivia, Aanya, Liam, Faith, and Ezekiel as if they are neighbors or our friends. Sophia Day welcomes the readers into the fold of these children's lives and helps us to know them in a meaningful way."

How can you help your child balance confidence with humility?

- Help children know their hidden value. Children who believe their accomplishments give them value will work harder to build a self-image of inflated value of just when their abilities are about being measured then see your child's confidence and see for what they accomplish, they will believe in themselves and working. Children who see what they are good and valued just for who they are.
- Help children set and achieve goals. To have humility, a child must first experience something. When children have set and accomplished a goal, they learn clearly, being objectives in the accomplishment rather than goals.
- Be specific, balanced praise. Research is clear that too much praise tends to be ineffective a child rather than to encourage. When children are not praised they may lose their confidence and therefore we accept that they are good at something, or at least that they are the whole and become proud to be important to the person who is a child needs a challenge with a great child in a accomplishment something that will set an individual. Praise should be awarded. "You worked very hard to do well on that test," "You did great," "You are smart," "You are a great student and smart," "You did well on a project," "You are a really good student."

Balance or response. Teach your child that praise requires a response to being of someone's praise to not be feeling in the spotlight. Balance or response requires that praise include a "thank you" for example, when a child is praised for an act project it may be appropriate to say, "Thank you. We are so excited because we got this background just right," or "Thank you. We are so glad to see a great artist and the response to it."

Teach children to appreciate. Another part of humility is the ability to appreciate. Encourage your child to be more open to others and give them through a common language. Showing this world is the most powerful way to do it.

Provide opportunities for children to learn others. Our children should always be given the opportunity to be a helper. We should also not forget to give them the opportunity to be a helper. We should also not forget to give them the opportunity to be a helper. We should also not forget to give them the opportunity to be a helper.

Help children share gratitude. Showing appreciation for another's success and help can be a key to building confidence and humility. We should also not forget to give them the opportunity to be a helper. We should also not forget to give them the opportunity to be a helper.

“The Real MVP Kids books are different than anything I’ve ever seen. Different in a good way. While entertaining, [Real MVP Kids books] also provide the opportunity to teach.”

Dr. Amy Baumann, Ed. D, Early Childhood Literacy Specialist

“My students love to recognize [the MVP Kids] and make connections to previous MVP books we have read. Overall great books and great series! The books includes questions at the end of the story that encourage reflection and discussion amongst group members. Highly recommend!”

Jenna Lizarraga, School Psychologist, LA School District

“It’s tough being a kid sometimes! Their feelings are all over the place sometimes. The Real MVP Kids have ways to help young children better understand their feelings in these new books. I love [these] series for not only the content, but the questions they offer up. They help parents and children have real conversations about the feelings, as well as recall information about the books.”

Andrea Crawford, Reading Specialist, www.thisliteracylife.com

Inspire Me-Books™

Each book is available in Kindle format at Amazon and are being converted into interactive e-book apps. These apps are designed to expand the experience of our content.

There are many ways to enjoy our Celebrate! Inspire Me-Books™:

- Your child can listen to the author, Sophia Day®, read the story. Hearing the pleasant rhythm of the story increases your child's understanding of language.
- Any time your child clicks a single word, the word will appear larger while the author pronounces it individually.

- Children can read on their own or hear the author read the story slowly. Each word will light up as it is read. This allows beginning readers to connect spoken words with text.
- Any time your child clicks a single word, the word will appear larger while the author pronounces it individually.

- Your child can play a game to help reinforce the ideas being taught.

HIDDEN TREASURES!

- Each page has hidden sounds embedded into the illustration. For example, you will find a “Woof!” when you tap a dog or a “Tick Tock” when you tap a clock.
- Each page also has animations that bring the MVP Kids to life
